Input: Face image from the web

Task: To Recognize the face image and Link to the corresponding entity in knowledge base

Knowledge base (partial view)

Fig. 1. An example of our face recognition task. Our task is to recognize the face in the image and then link this face with the corresponding entity key in the knowledge base. By recognizing the left image to be “Anne Hathaway” and linking to the entity key, we know she is an American actress born in 1982, who has played Mia Thermopolis in The Princess Diaries, not the other Anne Hathaway who was the wife of William Shakespeare. Input image is from the web.²
